Colleagues,

President Trump tasked me with right-sizing USAGM, a taxpayer-funded global media agency. We've been so effective over the last year that the Deep State has done everything they can to stop us, including launching malicious lawsuits at me and the agency. A rotund DC District Court judge wants me OUT of the agency, but despite his absurd orders and rulings, I remain in the exact same position today as I was before: Deputy CEO — where I am even more determined to finish the job.

Last summer, I testified before Congress on the importance of USAGM functions integrating into the Department of State, where we can ensure agency priorities align with U.S. foreign policy and the national interest. I look forward to working with Deputy Secretary Michael Rigas, a patriotic fighter with experience reducing the size of government, who will serve as Acting CEO. Together, Mike and I, while we wait for Under Secretary Sarah Rogers to be confirmed as USAGM CEO, will root-out corruption at the agency and make it more accountable to American taxpayers.

Sincerely,

Kari Lake
Deputy Chief Executive Officer

U.S. Agency for Global Media
